The 50th Anniversary Celebration of the Academy of Electrical Contracting

Excerpts from NECA's Magazine "Qualified Contractor" November 1968 Edition

THE ACADEMY OF Electrical Contracting was formally launched in Philadelphia last month with induction of 65 members.

The Academy had been approved several days before its first meeting by the NECA Board of Governors.

Its aims are two-fold:

1. To honor the outstanding leaders of the industry.
2. To provide them with a new and expanded channel for service to the industry.

Harold Webster, immediate past president of NECA and as such the chairman of the new Academy, said its formation is an effort by NECA "to broaden the opportunity for industry service and continue to draw on the vast reservoir of experience of those who have given liberally of their time in past service."

The Academy held its inaugural meeting in America's first hall dedicated to learning.

There were 37 of the 65 founding members present at the Oct. 16 meeting in Philosophical Hall where the American Philosophical Society has been meeting since 1789. A massive oil portrait of Benjamin Franklin, founder of the Society, hung above the chair where Mr. Webster presided. To one side was a portrait of Thomas Jefferson, a president of the Society, by Thomas Sully. On the other side was the last of the 12 Gilbert Stuart paintings of George Washington acquired directly by the Society from the artist in 1803.

Dr. George W Corner, executive officer of the Society, told the Fellows about the Society and its purposes and said that it welcomed the opportunity to support the worthy aims of the Academy by providing Philosophical Hall as its first meeting place. He then conducted the Fellows on a tour of the historic building.

Founding Meeting in Philosophical Hall—October 16, 1968.

The following is a partial text of the speech of Chairman Harold A. Webster to the inaugural meeting of the Academy of Electrical Contracting on October 16, 1968 at Philosophical Hall.

THIS IS INDEED an auspicious occasion. The Fellows of the Academy of Electrical Contracting, meeting here today for the first time, start a new chapter in the history of the industry. For each of us it is an honor to have this privilege of serving our industry further.

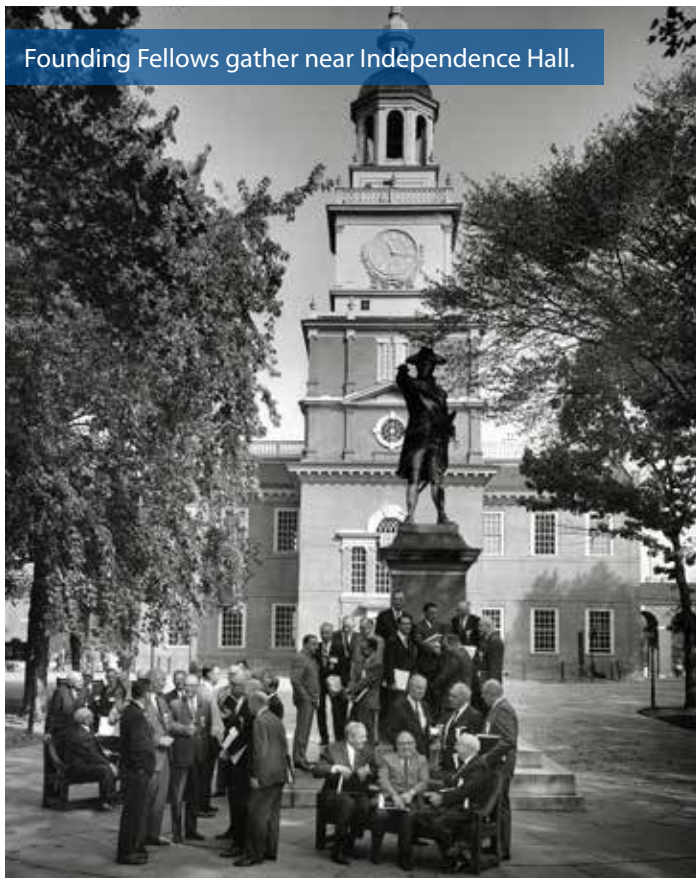

We have the high privilege of conducting this initial meeting in America's great shrine to knowledge, Philosophical Hall, the meeting place of the American Philosophical Society founded by Benjamin Franklin and which for two centuries represented the elite of the nation's literary, scientific and academic men and women. Thomas Jefferson was one of its Presidents and members included George Washington, Thomas Edison, Charles Darwin, Michael Faraday, Ralph Waldo Emerson, John James Audubon, the Marquis de Lafayette, Woodrow Wilson and Herbert Hoover. This venerable building, a step from Independence Hall, has been the annual meeting place of this distinguished Society since 1789 and it is, indeed, a signal recognition of the high purpose of this Academy in advancing the art of electricity that we are permitted to sit here.

This newly formed Academy of Electrical Contracting has as its objects the promotion and advancement of the interests, of the electrical contracting industry and the public which it serves by giving recognition to individuals who have served the industry well and providing a means for them to continue their contributions to progress consonant with the objectives of the Association.

It is an effort by the National Electrical Contractors Association, which has an enviable record of progressive accomplishments, to broaden the opportunity for industry service and continue to draw on the vast reservoir of experience of those who have given liberally of their time in past service. One of the tragedies of the day is the practice of industry of throwing onto the scrap heap the experience and talent of men able and eager to serve simply because they have reached an arbitrary age or point in service. The Academy is a move to lessen such waste in our industry and in doing so give a new dimension to the necessary control of change.

The theme of the 67th Anniversary Convention of NECA is "The Dimensions of Change." It provides an appropriate launching pad for the Academy. Those of us who have weathered the vicissitudes of this business – which is merely a way of saying that we have survived and adapted to change – are given an opportunity to view perhaps more objectively than some of our younger colleagues the challenges of change...

I perceive it to be the obligation of the business community to be ready with something better, and to constantly work for improvement of our economic social and political structures to accomplish orderly, disciplined change. We have failed to a marked degree when the anarchists move in as they have been doing on our campuses, into our inner cities and political assemblies. Should they succeed in destroying their targets, then our last line of defense is to have something constructive to fill the vacuum that they have created.

This is the major challenge of the moment and the new Academy provides an excellent apparatus to explore, analyze and recommend such constructive steps for our segment of the economy...

The exchange and cross-fertilization of ideas that flow when knowledgeable men in any field of endeavor come together is an important part in the role of the Academy. This is accomplished by regular meetings and the scheduling of reports to be presented and discussed. It is logical to assume that there will be an even freer flow of information and ideas due to the fact that the Fellows will be somewhat removed from the daily rough-and-tumble of their competitive business and also due to the fact that they have learned the real values of sharing.

There are important problems confronting our industry today. These naturally will be dealt with by the Association through its capable organization. These immediate day-to-day matters are not the primary concern of the Academy other than as to how they might affect the future course of the industry. The Academy will be free of the routine and the effort involved in such tactical problem solving.

The Academy will, however, be keenly interested in the past as well as the future. If you will look back over the chronicles of this industry you will find our problems are repetitive and actually are, for the most part, new only in magnitude resulting from growth. . .

I would hope that through the reflective and projective capabilities of the Academy Fellows that more light can be shed on these hangover problems of yesterday and that gradually they will disappear from our worksheets so we can devote more time and resources to new challenges.

Founding Fellows on the stairs in Philosophical Hall.

There is a whole crop of new problems peering down on us from the horizon. Electrical technology has been so rapid and all-inclusive that it has become the dominant art in building. This is especially true in respect to the systems that fit into the shell of a structure to make it livable and productive. The electrical contractor can no longer regard himself only as a wiring contractor. If he does and makes no move to widen his field, before long he will have very little to do. It is inevitable that this industry is moving into a systems pattern relying heavily on prefabrication of components and less on jobsite fabrication. . .

This does not necessarily mean a constriction of the electrical contractor's work. Rather, it portends a dramatic increase but only if he is motivated and assisted in assuming control of all of the applications directly associated with electricity. I refer to all aspects of electric comfort, including air conditioning, communications, protection and control as well as wiring for power and light. Obviously, much of the work of the Academy will be in this area of exploring ways and means that will make the electrical contractor primary in this vast electro-environment in which we live.

It is a pleasure and a privilege to greet you here this morning and welcome you aboard this new probe into our industry's future.

Academy Board of Directors

Elected Officers

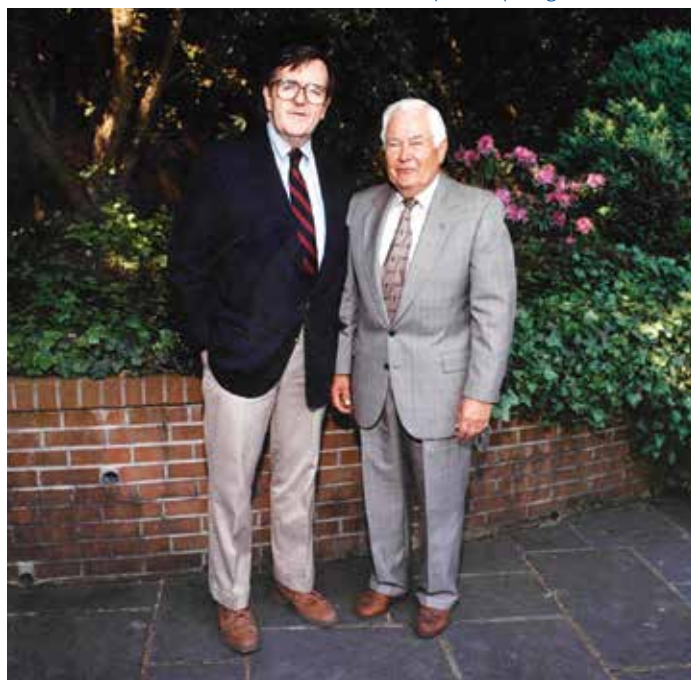

EACH YEAR AT the General Meeting, the Fellowship elects four Fellows to serve a three-year term on the Board of Directors, supplementing the current officers of NECA's Executive Committee. Below is a list of those Fellows who have helped to shape the Academy of Electrical Contracting over the last 50 years. The parenthetical number following some Fellows, e.g. (2), indicates the number of terms served if they were elected more than once.

Academy Jury of Fellows

FELLOWS ARE APPOINTED by the Academy Chairmen for an indefinite term. They meet annually to review nominations for fellowship. Their charge is to determine if a nominee has “rendered to the industry, either nationally or locally, services so outstanding and exceptional as to be beyond any normal call of duty or loyalty.”

Because there are no permanent records of the Jury meetings, it was difficult to identify all of the Fellows serving in this very important role prior to 1980.

Note: Fellows who have served as Chairman of the Jury are shown in bold with the years they were Chairman in bold.

Academy Papers by Fellows

PER ARTICLE II, Section 6, Fellows should “Prepare and deliver (not more often than once in any three year period) a paper on any subject relevant to the electrical contracting industry on which the Fellow is deemed to be knowledgeable.” Generally we have had from one to four papers presented each year, so there hasn’t been time for everyone to meet this responsibility. Here is a list of Fellows who have prepared and delivered one (or more) papers at annual meetings. The year(s) following their names indicate the year the paper was delivered. Asterisks (*) denote joint papers with other Fellows. All Academy papers dating back to 1971 are available on the Academy’s website.

Academy Speakers

1969 Dean Rusk Greenbrier in White Sulphur Springs, WV

One of the longest-serving US Secretaries of State, Rusk served under Kennedy and Johnson from 1961-69. Rusk supported diplomatic efforts during the Cuban Missile Crisis and expressed doubts about the escalation of the US role in the Vietnam War.

1970 Barry Goldwater Broadmoor in Colorado Springs, CO

Goldwater was a five-term US Senator from Arizona, who was also the Republican Party's nominee for President in the 1964 Presidential election. Goldwater is the politician most often credited with sparking the resurgence of the American conservative political movement in the 1960s.

1971 Lawrence Spivak Del Monte Lodge in Pebble Beach, CA

Publisher and journalist best known as the co-founder (with Martha Roundtree), producer and host of the TV program Meet The Press for twenty-eight years. MTP remains the longest-running continuous network series in TV history.

1972 Senator Hugh Scott Broadmoor in Colorado Springs, CO

Scott represented Pennsylvania in both the House and Senate and served as Senate Minority Leader from 1969 to 1977. He was a strong advocate for civil rights legislation and was one of the Republican leaders in the Senate who urged President Nixon to resign in the aftermath of the Watergate Scandal.

1973 Admiral Elmo Zumwalt Greenbrier in White Sulphur Springs, WV

Zumwalt was the youngest man to serve as Chief of Naval Operations in 1970 where he began a series of moves intended to reduce racism and sexism in the Navy. In Vietnam he commanded the flotilla of Swift Boats that patrolled the coasts, harbors and rivers of Vietnam. Zumwalt ordered the spraying of Agent Orange over the Mekong Delta to kill vegetation, forcing the Viet Cong away from the water's edge.

1974 Lowell Thomas Broadmoor in Colorado Springs, CO

An American writer and broadcaster, Thomas narrated Twentieth Century Fox's newsreels until 1952. He was promoter of Cinerama (recording with three cameras and using three projectors on a curved screen). He was a broadcaster for CBS and NBC radio ending each broadcast with his classic sign-off: "So long until tomorrow".

Purposes of the Academy

The Academy of Electrical Contracting honors outstanding leaders in the electrical contracting industry, and it preserves and utilizes their wealth of experience and knowledge for the benefit of the industry.

Fellows of the Academy have rendered exceptional service to the industry and the National Electrical Contractors Association, and that service is continued and enhanced through their fellowship in the Academy. This is accomplished through the Academy's Working Group, special papers presented by Fellows, participation in the Annual Meeting and the general camaraderie among Fellows.

The Academy of Electrical Contracting is sponsored by the National Electrical Contractors Association.
